PROGRAMMING POWER to PROFESSIONALS...

What is the FORTH INTEREST GROUP?

The Forth Interest Group (FIG) is a non-profit, member-supported organization devoted to the programming language Forth.

Formed in 1978, FIG helped popularize the Forth language through FIG-Forth, a famous public-domain Forth for microcomputers. FIG later participated in the Forth Standards Team, which developed the 1979 and 1983 Forth Standards, and actively promotes the new American National Standard for Forth.

The Forth Interest Group also promotes Forth and supports its users through:

Forth Dimensions

This bi-monthly magazine contains news, tutorials, and technical articles of interest to Forth programmers from novice to expert. Published by FIG since 1978, Forth Dimensions has been called "among the very best of the special-interest technical magazines."

FORML Conference

Held each November at the Asilomar Conference Center in northern California, the Forth Modification Laboratory is a three-day forum where the latest Forth research is presented and ongoing development is debated. At "FORML," you can meet and learn from foremost authorities in the worldwide Forth community.

Forth Software Library

From its earliest days, FIG has helped collect and disseminate Forth systems and Forth applications of every kind. First on private BBSs, then on the GEnie time-sharing service, and now on the Internet, FIG boasts the world's largest library of Forth code. And FIG recently inaugurated the Forth Scientific Library, a collection of reviewed programs for scientific applications.

Mail-Order Bookstore

Hard-to-find Forth books and software are available worldwide thanks to FIG's mail-order service. Some materials are available nowhere else—such as Leo Brodie's popular book Thinking Forth, recently republished by FIG. FIG also publishes conference proceedings, and makes the most popular Forth software available on disk.

Chapters

FIG sponsors local chapters where Forth programmers meet and converse regularly. Most FIG chapters offer technical and educational programs; all offer a chance to socialize with colleagues in the Forth community.
